Washington, 31.—The examination of Peterson was continued. He was a mail contractor, and knew the witness Walsh. He had heard a portion of his testimony and read the remainder. Witness was asked if he had ever given postal drafts to Walsh. The question was objected to by the prosecution. In the argument which followed Ingersoll said it might come to light that Peterson paid Walsh as his attorney, but that General Brady knew nothing of the transactions. If they could prove Peterson never paid money to Brady, as testified by Walsh, it would destroy the foundation of that statement and tend to discredit the entire conversation. A long argument followed upon this point, which was interrupted by recess.

After recess Brady took up the argument, and said if the statements were admitted government would have to produce documentary evidence which would show the disposition of the draft was totally inconsistent with the story which he assumed Peterson would tell. The long investigation which would follow would drag in another gentleman, whose name had already been mentioned in this case, but whom he desired to leave out of it altogether. It would compel the government to supplement Walsh's testimony by evidence which would show his, and not Peterson's was the correct statement. He therefore believed it best to exclude the testimony. The court said it seemed to him the evidence not admissible. The evidence to be given by Peterson did not seem to contradict anything said by Walsh. His statement might be true so far as he was concerned, and yet Walsh's story of what Brady did might also be true. Brady might have been lying when he told Walsh of Peterson. The man who would seize notes and commit a highway robbery, would not hesitate about lying. If all men would tell the truth perhaps this testimony could be received.

McSweeney asked, what would lawyers do in such a state of society. The court said if this testimony was received it would open up a subject that might be gone into indefinitely. It was a question of a truth between Brady and Walsh, and Brady was a competent witness.

Wilson then noted an exception, in which is stated the offer of the defense to prove the drafts alluded to by the witness Walsh were given to Walsh by Peterson in return for services rendered as attorney, and that Brady had no connection directly or indirectly with the transaction. The form of objection was objected to by the court, who said the defense had the privilege of proving by the witness, if they could, that Brady had no connection with the transaction.

The witness was then asked if he ever paid Brady any money for expedition. This question was objected to and sustained by the court. Peterson's route was not included in the indictment. After another unsuccessful effort to put the question in another form, the witness was directed to stand aside.

J. L. French, chief clerk in the office of the second assistant postmaster-general, testified that it was an unusual circumstance for persons to combine for the purpose of bidding for contracts, and this was a practice well known to the department. It was unusual for parties to bid over their own names and not the name of a combination. The witness then detailed the practices of the contract office, saying the old contract used as guide in preparing advertisements for new services, and new routes usually started with a slow schedule, and increased as seemed necessary. Witness said it was a frequent occurrence to change service under a contract after its execution and before the beginning of the service under it. It was invariably the custom to allow the contractor a month's extra pay, even if the order for service had been revoked before the date had arrived for putting on the service. Witness believed the second assistant postmaster-general was called upon to sign his name about 500 or 600 times every day. After describing at length the business of the contract office, the conclusion of witness' testimony was postponed till to-morrow. Adjourned.

A Square Decision.

Washington, 31.—The secretary of the interior has decided a question of some importance to the Pacific Slope and western territories, in connection with the timber lands. Two wood cutters had been arrested by a special agent of the department for cutting 500 cords of masquite upon the public lands in Arizona. The 100 cords remaining in their possession was turned over to the United States, and they offered to compromise the case by payment of $1 a cord for the portion disposed of. The secretary holds that, according to King's geological report, masquite is a shrub, not a timber tree. Its wood has little value, except as a fuel, and it cannot be applied to the ordinary uses of timber. The secretary says that to charge wood cutters who are generally a poor class of people, $1 a cord for masquite, is a great hardship. The timber laws were not enacted to put money into the treasury, but to protect timber on public lands, and masquite is not a timber within the meaning of the statutes. The special agent is therefore directed to return the seized cordwood to its rightful owners.

Lynch.

St. Louis, 31.—On Thursday last a negro named Caldwell, attempted to ravish Mrs. Peck, a white woman 60 years old, at Canton, Mo., but was prevented by the timely arrival of several men who appeared on the scene in response to the cries of the old lady. The negro was arrested. Yesterday he had a preliminary examination, and in default of bail was remanded to jail. Between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning a party of about 100 men forcibly took Caldwell from the jail, hanged him to the Iron Mountain Railroad bridge near by, after which they fired several shots into his body to make the work doubly sure.
